Pedestrian sharrows will make walking in the street safer

Between 2015-2017, Richmond will have more than $119 million to play with. The recently adopted Six-Year Improvement Program budget from the Commonwealth Transportation Board (CTB) will fund several transportation improvement projects.

Among them will be Pedestrian sharrows, typically a person with arrows atop it spray painted to the side of a travel lane, done as a visual indication to both motorists and cyclists that pedestrian travel takes place at that particular location.

Designated to installed in fiscal year 2015, the first Pedestrian sharrows will installed throughout Church Hill North and Fairmount, as studies have shown a local propensity for walking in the middle of the street.

Other funding in the Six-Year improvement program includes completing Phase 3 of Main Street Station, providing a cobblestone roadbed on the east end of the African Burial Ground, traffic system upgrades in South Richmond, among other projects.
